Molly Dhan

Molly is a seamstress for Global Mamas and lives in Cape Coast. After two years with Global Mamas Molly has expanded her sewing workshop that is now humming morning to night with the sewing machines used by her five employees and apprentices. Molly takes pride in her work and particularly enjoys the challenge of making reversible dresses for Global Mamas.

Since joining Global Mamas Molly enjoys a more reliable stream of income that has improved her situation dramatically. She has:

- Increased her income six-fold
- Hired three full time employees and accepted four apprentices without charging them a fee
- Acquired her own shop
- Purchased two additional sewing machines
- Started providing food for her workers
- Opened a savings account and started saving money for her future
- Began supporting additional family members

Cape Coast | Batik Textiles

Cape Coast is the home to the Global Mamas Batik & Sewing Group – the first Global Mamas location. Participation in the group has expanded from six founding members in 2003 to 50 small, women-owned business in 2007. The production of Global Mamas products has generated over 80 new jobs and directly enhanced the standard of living and confidence of over 150 women in the community.

Stella Barnes

Twenty-two-year-old Stella Barnes grew up in the village of Ajumako-Ampiah helping on the family farm and acquiring entrepreneurial skills working with her mum. Stella always dreamed of becoming a seamstress and her family supported her apprenticeship for three years. Stella is delighted to be a founding member of the Global Mamas group. Stella's passion for quality handiwork and motivation to excel in life makes her a good role model to the other women in the group.

With the help of Global Mamas, Stella hopes to:

- Ensure her siblings and future children have a good education
- Provide her mother with financial support
- Set up a sewing shop in a larger town

Ajumako | Weaving

The residents of Ajumako-Ampiah rely on farming of cocoa, oranges, coconuts, and bananas for their livelihoods. However, farming does not bring outside income into the village. Looking for ways to create new revenue for the village, Team Ghana sponsored the start-up of the Global Mamas Weaving and Sewing Center in 2007. The talented women of Ajumako are now weaving beautiful rugs and trivets from the scrap fabric generated in Cape Coast. In 2008, the group plans to double their membership to include 12 women and expand their product line to include other products made from recycled materials. The income generated through the sales of Global Mamas products will have a substantial impact on the lives of women and their families in this remote village.

Edna Kwame

There was never any question that Edna would be a bead-maker. Her whole family is in the bead business and she started learning the craft from her mother when she was just five years old.

With the help of Global Mamas, Edna:

- Has tripled her earnings and reduced her expenses
- Pays for her brother and niece's school fees
- Supports her mother and pays the family's medical bills
- Plans to build her own family home to ensure "peace of mind"

Krobo | Recycled Glass Beads

Bead making has been a thriving industry in West Africa since the sixteenth century and the Krobo area of Ghana is known as one of the bead-making hubs. The handcrafting of beads using clay molds and ovens has changed little over the centuries as the family craft is passed down through the generations. In Krobo, beads are handmade from all kinds of recycled glass such as bottles, jars, and broken windows. Krobo beads are widely known for their vibrant colors and high level of craftsmanship, but export opportunities for small producers, especially women, are extremely limited. Most small, family-run bead-making businesses are in a cycle of dependence on larger bead wholesalers which set extremely low rates. Through the Global Mamas Bead Network, 15 small-scale bead makers and 12 female assemblers have joined forces to increase production capacity as a group. Global Mamas helps them to design and produce high quality products and provides access to markets outside of Ghana.
